

Websites

If you Google or do a search for breast cancer in your web browser, you could receive over 38 million available sites. Some websites have accurate information, whereas others can be very misleading. Please remember that anyone can post a website. There are no regulations enforcing the information posted on websites, some of which can be simply inaccurate.

Check out these sites for accurate information:

www.conehealth.com — Cone Health System has an extensive health resource section with hundreds of links to very accurate information about what cancer is, specific information about breast cancer and surgical options, with links to medical librarians who will guide you to the information you seek and medical and radiation oncologists that may be involved in your care. To Access: click [Cancer Care] then click [Medical Services]

www.breastcancer.org — An excellent site for providing information and a good explanation of your pathology report.

www.cancer.org — The American Cancer Society site.

Note: If you read something that you are not sure of, please ask your doctor.
